What is a March of Remembrance?

Remembering: We honor the Holocaust survivors and let their voices be heard and their stories be told. We remember — not only those who were lost in the Holocaust, but also those who fought for freedom: the upstanders who risked their lives for the victims; the soldiers who fought and sacrificed in World War II; and the leaders who spoke out.

Reconciling: We provide opportunity for participants to acknowledge the atrocities of the Holocaust and process the consequences of remaining silent in the face of persecution, prejudice, and indifference. Descendants of perpetrators, as well as bystanders, have a chance to express their remorse to survivors, their descendants, and the Jewish community. Survivors and their families have the opportunity to tell their stories and sensitize Christians to the issues of the Holocaust.

Taking a Stand: The March engages people and invites them to take action by walking with a purpose. In the ongoing dynamic between a person's thoughts, attitudes, and actions, participating in a March against modern-day anti-Semitism makes a strong statement.

The purpose of the March is to honor the survivors of the Holocaust. It is not a platform for publicity to promote an agenda on the part of any person or organization.
